Dr. Spaz: Good morning. Today's program will deal with who we are. We have chosen some lovely people from our studio audience to help us in our presentation today. So, if they will just come up on stage and each take a turn telling us Who You Are?

Vignette Number One

Mother: Hello. (waves to audience)

Father: (to his wife) Well, who are we?

Mother: Well, we have a lovely home, five children, and a dog named Max. Oh, and we have pictures. (She holds out a picture sleeve from a wallet – it flips open all the way to the floor and is completely filled with pictures of the “family”) This is our daughters at the beach. And this is our son at his kindergarten graduation...and this is Max dressed up as Santa Claus...

Vignette Number Two

Confident Person: Hi there. I graduated high school top in my class. I'll be heading to Harvard this fall – full scholarship. My dad bought me this great car and I'm very popular. Homecoming King, Voted Most Likely to Succeed by my senior class and Everyone I know wants to be me. That's who I am.

Vignette Number Three

Shy Person: I'm no one. Please skip me.

(Dr. Spaz walks out in front of the people and addresses the audience.)

Dr. Spaz: These people are lying. Well, actually, not LYING. But, when asked the question, “Who are you?” they responded with who they think they are...in their own little nutshells. Some responded by saying what they do, others by describing their families, and others by what they appear to be.
